Notes:

If you are married or in a civil partnership, your spouse or civil partner will automatically receive a dependant's pension in the event of your death, so you do not need to nominate them. This form relates to members who are not married or in a civil partnership but have been in an exclusive mutual relationship for at least two years.

The payment conditions that must be met at the time of death are:

- you must have pensionable teaching service after 31 December 2006
- you and your qualifying partner must have been living together in an exclusive committed long-term relationship for at least 2 years
- you must not be married or in a civil partnership. If you or your partner have divorced or dissolved a civil partnership, please send a certified copy of the decree absolute document(s)
- your qualifying partner is financially dependent on you or you are financially interdependent. We will test financial interdependency when you die
- you must have completed sufficient relevant service to qualify for partner benefits as specified below

Financial interdependency means you have joint finances. It doesn't mean that you need to be contributing equally. Evidence of financial interdependency could include confirmation that:

- you live in a shared household
- you share household spending
- you have shared bank accounts or investments
- you have a loan or mortgage in joint names
- your wills name each other as the main beneficiary
- you hold mutual power of attorney
- your qualifying partner is nominated as the main beneficiary of your life assurance

You must provide three pieces of evidence to show financial interdependency.

Remember, neither you nor your qualifying partner can be married to, or in a civil partnership with, anyone else.

We'll pay a pension to a surviving partner provided that you have been in the scheme for two years from 1 January 2007. We'll also pay if you were in service on or after 1 January 2007 and have covered a minimum of two years' previous teaching service to qualify for family benefits. You can cover previous teaching service within six months of nominating your partner for family benefits by paying extra contributions.

Your qualifying partner will receive their pension for the rest of their life, even if they enter a new relationship after you die. Their pension will be paid each month, and will be increased every April to reflect increases in the cost of living.

We will also pay a lump sum death grant if you die before you retire. Nomination for death grant can be submitted on My Pension Online by navigating to Member Portal > My Request > Death Grant.

You may find it useful to visit our family benefits guide at <https://www.teacherspensions.co.uk/members/resources/guides> for more information about family benefits and nominations.

When you die your partner should notify Teachers' Pensions and complete a claim form available at Death Benefit Form.

They'll be asked for information supporting their claim to a partner's pension. This will be requested at the time of your death rather than at the date of your declaration. We need to be sure that you continue to meet the conditions for nominated partners. So, if your circumstances force you to spend your final years away from home, for example, in residential nursing care, this will be taken into account.
